HR 1004 Regulatory Integrity Act of 2017	Requires each executive branch agency to publish pending regulations and related public statements on their websites.	Yes	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Ensures federal agencies conduct their rule-making process in an open, timely, and transparent manner. • Requires daily updates on agencies' public websites with the information that they already collect during the rule-making process. • Resulted from a situation in which the EPA had begun to use a social media tool to engage in grassroots lobbying to actively solicit public support for a certain rule. Those actions were illegal. • The nonpartisan Government Accountability Office (GAO) recommended that Congress clarify the rule-making process to prevent the same situation from happening again, and HR 1004 reflects those recommendations. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Would prohibit federal agencies from making any public communication about a pending agency regulatory action that could be interpreted as propaganda, seeking publicity, or direct advocacy. • Based on this definition, virtually any action an agency might take to communicate the benefits of a rule could be viewed as advocating for the rule, publicity, or propaganda. • Could leave the public less informed about agency activities because agencies would likely restrict communications with the public in order to avoid the possibility of violating the prohibitions the bill contains.
HR 2353 Career and Technical Education Act	Reforms career and technical education (CTE) to ensure that such programs meet the needs of today's workforce. Has the Department of Education cede to the states control over CTE funds.	Not recorded (voice vote)	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Office does not know how Rep. Panetta voted on this bill, given that it was passed by voice vote, and individual votes were not recorded. Office assumes he supported this bill. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Current law requires that federally-funded institutions work to promote gender equity and holds them accountable for participation and completion rates in programs non-traditional to a students' gender. • Under this bill, states would set their own goals for participation and completion with minimal input from the Department of Education.
